Peter Alcibiades Dresses Like a Turk and Cries "Vive

le Sultan!"

Vhas Peter Atelbiades Hercules Papboarded the Austro-American ugenia, bound out to-day for Greece, his whole being vibrated rith patriotic ardor. He was going to by down his life, if need be, for his fellente fatherland. As he lies on a bed

Pappalousa, Mneal descendant of that great and cultured Alcibiades of an epoch when the Greeks ruled the earth. epoch when the Greeks ruses the sale. He thought he would play a joyous little prank on 839 fellow Greek reserviate, who were also sailing on the Bugenia to join the armies of the Allies.

The Greek patriots just about filled every crack and corner of the Eugenia and they marched aboard last night dinging their national anthem and huriing anathema upon the Turk. Peter was with them and when he got down to his stateroom he bethought him of funny joke. In his luggage he had Turkish costume and wouldn't it be and harem skirt, curly toed slippers and a scimitar and then bob up on deck and yell "Yive le Sultan!"

And Peter did just this, chuckling the while he climbed to the upper deck, burbling and crooning over his funny joke and what a laugh he was to have on his countrymen when they discovered that he was not a Turk.

But somehow that laugh failed to scorue to Peter Alcibiades Hercules Pappajousa. It will be many days before his face warps back into that peaceful repose where it is possible to smile even wistfully, let alone laugh. Some seven hundred odd Greeks walked on Peter's face shortly after he sprouted iato their midst and cried his "Long life to the Sultan." The remaining one hundred and twenty-nine Greeks were hundred and twenty-nine Greeks were destrous of paying the same compliment to their uncient enemy, but were restrained by the intervention of the salp's officers and crew saved Peter Happalousa's life, and four surgeons went to work on him in the ship's hospital and were still working on him as the ves'el sailed. Peter was rescued shortly after his masquerade had been stripped from him and he had been slugged with some thousand missiles and bludgeons. His pulse was very low and he was scarcely breathing, and it was same hours later before his fellow countrymen learned that he was not a ruly Turk.

While the surgeons were tenderly

While the surgeons were tenderly ministering to Peter, the patriots who had just missed tearing him to pieces, amused themselves by stuffing the costume they had ripped from his insensate form and hanging it in efficy. They must the hated symbol upon a cargo crans, and as it swung with grotesquely flapping arms and less, they hurled at it everything they could lay their hands upon.

BLOSSOM TAKES HER PEN IN HAND AND WRITES COURT

Vaudeville Artist's Troubles With Hubby Are Over and She Begs to Remain Yours Truly. Blossom Seeley, who has just been through the awfulest experience with her husband, Joe Kane, because Hubby Kane was so frightfully jealous of Riesem's new and promising young vaudeville partner, Mr. Rube Marquard bit deep into the end of a penholder te-day and turned out the following spistle to Magistrate Keyran O'Compor:

"Dear Magistrate: I have this day entered into a legal agreement with my busband. Mr. Joseph Kane, for whom I obtained a summons, who has ogreed not to molest me in any way ner trouble me in the future, which paper is now in my possession. I wish o withdraw the complaint against him owing to the ground that we have agreed to live apart."

Further, Blossom wished to extend thanks and felicitations to Magistrate O'Connor for any little favors he might have shown her in the past, or which might be forthcoming in the future.

and to beg to remain his truly. Kane was visibly relieved when the Magistrate read to him the communication of his wife, and explained that he was free to leave the courtroom without wearing handcuffs or being secorted by policemen.
